Intertidal Kinning

Celebrating & protecting the Fraser Estuary through community engagement and environmental stewardship

The Fraser Estuary is a vital ecosystem that sustains diverse marine and land-based species, including humans. These events celebrate its splendor and encourage diverse ways of understanding its significance.

The Fraser Estuary is a vital ecosystem that sustains a diverse array of marine and land-based species, including humans. Recognizing the importance of caring for this precious and endangered place, this event series aims to celebrate the estuary's splendor, encourage diverse ways of understanding its significance, and invite event participants to take/implement meaningful steps to safeguard it for future generations.

The title of this series comes from KINSHIP: Belonging in a World of Relations, a five book essay series published by the Center for Humans & Nature Press, edited by Gavin Van Horn, Robin Wall Kimmerer and John Hausdoerffer. The series was created to foreground the concept of 'kinship' as a verb - kinning: "....In Kinship: Earth -and everything within it, including all that creates what we call earth - is a verb. All is in motion; all is relating." As book's introduction so eloquently states, "...Kinning is cultivated by humans, as one expression of life among many, many, many others, and it revolves around an ethical question: how to rightly relate?"

In gathering at the Blue Cabin over the course of two weeks as tides ebb and flow, those who join/participate in this series will actively work together across disciplines, ages, backgrounds, and species - kinning to better understand practices of belonging with, and amongst, each other and all kin of the estuary. Join us!
